Narratives for the nocturnal city through architectural displays

Anke von der Heide, Curator, Media Artist & Researcher, ZwischenWerk gUG, Berlin

Media architecture is mainly part of iconic city centers or skyline areas, often linked to office, shopping and event zones, and illuminated 24/7. It is also an element of the nocturnal urban design. Since the lockdown, these typically crowded spaces have been empty and messages are no longer seen by the public. Instead, they are photographed and put online, they become part of a digital social space and communicate with a more global society. This applies in a similar way to many actors and venues of the night economy. In this context, I will also introduce our latest live VR event space, transferring events from the 2D stream into a 3D world with social interaction.
