light in the world's

Filmmaker Michael O. Snyder discusses his film, Into the Dark, about a team of scientists who embark on a perilous winter expedition into the darkest regions of the Arctic during the sunless winter months. Their mission: to understand how trace amounts of light may be radically altering the mysterious world of the polar night. Snyder will discuss the experience of filming in and exploring the darkest place on the planet and the implications that this research has for the future of the Arctic.
